SPORTS TECH

Focused on Optimizing Performance

Over the last few years, the sports technology industry has been characterized by rapid growth, innovation, and the emergence of early stage, disruptive companies ready to take the industry by storm. Even now, everything continues to move at the speed of light. Today's sports tech companies need to be open, responsive, and most importantly, ready to capitalize on opportunities that present themselves. It's an exciting time in a growing industry for disruptive, groundbreaking companies with big ideas and management teams ready to execute. Growth and opportunity may come from expansion into a new sales channel, acquisition of talent in a new region or by pivoting on an overall business model. Internal and stakeholder reporting, state and local tax, and possibly international reporting, become critical paths to success and finding an advisor, who understands the industry and the unique challenges these companies face will be vital.

A great deal of capital is circulating through the marketplace, but the bar has been raised for sports tech start-ups because investors want more – they want results, information, and a plan to deliver. Today, successful entrepreneurs move quickly through different ideas over the span of months instead of years. Developing a winning business model that can stand the test of time is essential. Sports tech companies must be more nimble than ever, as they master the art of the pivot. Delivering solid returns for investors against plan is critical, in a much shorter timeframe.
